In his first exhibition at Team, Los Angeles artist Ry Rocklen shows funny and unexpected sculptures, little renditions of his friends wrapped in everyday food items: Jacqueline's enveloped in an ice cream cone, while Brian has merged with a hot dog. Embedded in these diminutive sculptures are bigger questions about what is consuming what in capitalist culture. The artist has been included in the 2008 Whitney Biennial and the Hammer Museum's 2012 "Made in LA," so if you haven't already been paying attention, he's one to watch.

83 Grand Street, October 5–Saturday, November 4; opening reception, 6 p.m.–8 p.m.
